

For further details contact
Geoff on geoff231@mac.com or 07949 153431

Psychosexual issues have tended to be seen as a specialism, rather than as an integral aspect of human life. Yet, we are at core sexual beings and throughout our lives we constantly develop our sexuality, as men and women, within specific life phases. Without our sexual nature being mirrored, it cannot be integrated into our experience of ourselves. The resulting inner discord may foster a tendency to act out sexually later in life – either by repressing our natural sexual impulses or by over-exciting them.

UK Centre for Psychosexual Therapy & Education

Beyond Oedipus

A new approach to working with psychosexual & relational issues in everyday practice.

Children need to be properly mirrored in order to internalise a healthy self-concept, but cultural difficulties regarding the body and sex have meant that our need for Sexual Mirroring has been ignored, leaving a void in our development. Society compounds this problem with its tendency to over-stimulate ideas of sex and gender and we embody society's mental-emotional over-excitement, stimulated by a consumer culture that can never support us in being grounded in reality.

How can we provide what is needed for our clients or students? Beyond Oedipus presents a new way of seeing these issues.

This workshop is for counsellors and psychotherapists as well as other practitioners who may be working with psychosexual issues.

Saturday 8th April 2017

10-6pm

Philadelphia Association,
Hampstead, London
NW3

Cost: £125,
including tea & coffee

The one-day workshop will offer:

- A new, client and practitioner friendly, version of the classic Freudian Oedipal Triangle as an embodied cognition of love and the sexual energy.

An introduction to how practitioners can assist in repairing the lack of "Sexual Mirroring" our culture suffers from.

An exploration of the kinds of problems, which emerge in adult relationships, which have more to do with parents than partners.

The opportunity for supervisory advice on cases with which participants are currently working.

Support your clients in their dyadic rather than triadic relationships

Geoff Lamb has been practicing as a psychotherapist for over 30 years and was the Director of Inter-Psyche (The only counselling training organisation based within the NHS) from 2005 to 2017. In addition to his private practices in London and West Sussex, he has extensive group-work experience in Europe. He is co-founder of the UK Centre for Psychosexual Therapy and a professional member of the Association of Somatic and Integrative Sexologists (ASIS). In addition to his psychotherapy qualifications, Geoff is a qualified Sexual Grounding Therapist and holds a First Class Honours degree in neuroscience and a master's in health psychology.

Geoff has written numerous articles on relational counselling and psychotherapy.

Helena Løvendal-Duffell has been in private practice in London since 1988. She was a faculty member at The Institute of Psychosynthesis in London, co-founded The Centre For Gender Psychology and Creative Couple Work, offering specialist training in Relationship Therapy & Coaching. She is co-founder of the UK Centre for Psychosexual Therapy.

Helena offers psychotherapy, coaching and workshops, as well as specialist training and supervision for professionals in relationships, sex and gender relations in UK, Europe, and Scandinavia. She originated the "Ways of Woman" program and was amongst the first qualified Sexual Grounding Therapists®, Helena is an SGT Senior Trainer and is Head of Education SGT International in May 2013.

Her approach evolved from her personal development work and professional training with International leading teachers. Her first book "Sex, Love and the Dangers of Intimacy – a guide to passionate relationships when the 'Honeymoon' is over", co-authored with her husband, was published by HarperCollins in 2002 and re-published in 2010 by Lone Arrow Press. She is currently working on her next book, working title "Sex, Love & Co-Creative Partnerships– Finding Paradise in Reality From the Ground Up", is expected to be published Feb 2018.

